Europe Fountain in Bocholt

In 1972, Bocholt was awarded the honorary title "Municipality of Europe", followed by the European flags and the designation "European City". The awarding of the title was the occasion for the creation of the Europe Fountain in front of the Historic Town Hall. Artist Friederich Werthmann designed the steel sculpture for the 750th anniversary. He used a sphere in openwork form to represent it. The globe, the earth disk and the sun ring are symbolised.

Historical steam engine in Bocholt

The historic steam engine, popularly known as the "Fuckepott", stands near the shopping arcades. It is one of the few lying steam engines in Germany still preserved in its core part.

In 1972, the demolition hammer hovered over a relic from the early days of the steam engine, which had been preserved on the Ostwall on the site of the former weaving and roughening mill Tacke & Piekenbrok. Today it is a reminder of the age of industrialisation with a once flourishing textile industry in Bocholt.

Mack Stele in Bocholt

The light column on Ravardistraße is a concrete pillar about 17 metres high. The multifaceted light reflections are striking due to the multi-faceted cut of the aluminium cladding. The light column was built in 1984 by the artist Prof. Heinz Mack.

Due to the constantly changing light reflections, the work of art is visible from afar and changes colour depending on the time of day.

South Bridge Memorial

Diepenbrock Castle

© Stadt Bocholt

Diepenbrock Castle

Diepenbrock Castle is located in the Barlo district. It is an old knight's seat, first mentioned in 1326 as an Arnheim fief owned by the Lords of Diepenbrock.

The rectangular two-storey manor house with a high hipped roof and round towers at the south-west and north-east corners consists of four parts built between the 15th and early 17th centuries.

There are rare and remarkable trees in the castle park. The water feature on a quarry site is also striking.

Diepenbrock Castle is privately owned. Therefore, only an outside visit is possible.
